

the Rev. J. B. Jones, the Rev. T. B. Lee and the Rev. W. W. Keep. Pallbearers were ex-governors Harris Flanagan and Henry M. Rector, Gen. Grandison Royston, Col. Gordon N. Peay, Hon. U. M. Rose, Hon. John R. Eakin, Capt. John E. Reardon and Gen. T. J. Churchill. The legislature adjourned for the day and marched from the state house to the funeral in a body.

A legislative committee of seven was appointed to draft a resolution of tribute, and the text of the tribute appeared in the Gazette on the day after the funeral.

The grave of Sandford Faulkner remains unmarked today, but the Pulaski County Historical Society recently voted to erect a marker at his grave.

The grave of Edward Washburn, painter of the Traveler, also is in Mount Holly, and is also unmarked today. Washburn and his father, the Rev. Cephas Washburn, died within a few days of each other, and were buried side by side. A small marker bearing both their names was erected. Later it was replaced by the Presbyterian Synod with a larger monument, but the new tombstone was to the father and made no mention of the famous son. Removal of the old stone leaves his grave unmarked.

But what of the children of Sandy Faulkner? The legislative tribute to Faulkner says that "of his many children, four survive him." Two of these we know to have been Sally and Sandford, Jr. Four of his children we know to have died before their father. One other daughter, Mattie, outlived her father only briefly. She died the following year, on July 17, 1875, at the age of 31 years. She had married a Mr. Buchanan. She too is buried at Mount Holly cemetery. We lack the name of Sandy Faulkner's fourth surviving child, but it must have been either Philip or Minnie, referred to as "the children of his old age," both of whom died at some time prior to 1900.

We follow Sandford, Jr., only briefly after his father's death. On August 7, 1874, the Gazette announced that, on the motion of Mr. Fishback, he was elected doorkeeper to the legislature, to fill the vacancy occasioned by his father's death. Goodspeed says that he outlived his brothers and sisters, and eventually moved to another state.

Faulkner's daughter, Sally, fared badly after the death of her father. On January 18, 1880, the Gazette carried the news that "a relative of the Arkansas Traveler" had been evicted from her home in Little Rock because she could not pay the rent. The woeful status to which she had been reduced is amplified by the inimitable Opie Read, in an article captioned "No Longer a Belle", which was published in the Dardanelle Independent Arkansian of March 19, 1880:

Little Rock, Feb. 29.--The once most beautiful woman in Arkansas is now a beggar and, though not a literary woman, has a wooden leg. She is the daughter of Sandy Faulkner, the original "Arkansaw Traveler". She has been married several times, and is now known as Mrs. Trapnell. In the old days of Arkansas aristocracy, when the rich planters and men of note gathered at the Ashley mansion, Miss Faulkner was the belle, petted flattered and admired by every one. Her
